

When someone dies

An easy read leaflet to help to support people with learning disabilities through a bereavement

This booklet has been created to support people with learning disabilities following a bereavement.

It is anticipated that the person with a learning disability will be supported by a family member, friend, care giver or professional to work through the booklet. This support is important to help the person with a learning disability understand the written content and also to give them the opportunity to talk about the person who has died, their feelings and to ask any questions they may have.

A complementary support leaflet is also available, which provides information and practical strategies for those who are supporting somebody with a learning disability through a bereavement. Please refer to :

'When someone dies. A support booklet'

Whilst this booklet was developed to help meet the needs of people with a learning disability, much of the information and strategies may be useful when working with young children.

has died.

Let's talk about what that means....

Life's journey

Every living thing is created.

Every living thing grows.

Every living thing dies.

Why do people die?

Some people die when they are young and others die when they are old.

Some people die after an accident.

Some people die when they are really sick.

It is not your fault that someone has died.

What does dying mean?

When people are alive they

When people are dead they

Breathe

Stop breathing

Talk

Stop talking

Move

Stop moving

Feel

Stop feeling

When someone dies you might:

feel sad

feel angry

feel tired

want to be by yourself

have a sore head

feel lonely

have nightmares

feel scared or worried

feel sick

What happens after someone dies?

People will visit the family of the person who has died.

People may bring flowers and cards.

People will talk about the person who has died.

Sometimes the coffin will be in the house.

Some people want to go to see the person in the coffin so they can say good bye. It is up to you whether you go and see the person.

If you visit the person in their coffin you might notice that the person looks and feels different.

What is a funeral?

After someone dies there is a funeral. The funeral is usually lead by a priest or a minister.

It is a time for family and friends to say good bye.

At most funerals people will talk, pray and sing.

Some people will cry and some people will not. It is OK to cry.

Some people will be buried in a graveyard and some people will be cremated.

Some people want to go to a funeral, others do not. It is up to you whether you go or don't go to the funeral.

After the funeral

You might feel sad some days and other days you might feel OK.

You will not be able to see the person who has died but you can think or talk about them.

As time passes you should start to feel better.

You might feel really sad again on special occasions like christmas and birthdays. It is OK to feel sad.

If you do not start to feel better ask friends, family or someone like your doctor or social worker for help.

Things that might help you feel better

Remember - it is OK to cry if you need to.

Try and do the things that you would normally do.

It is OK to talk about the person who has died.

You can visit the persons grave or go to a special place to remember them.

Keep a special object that belonged to the person who has died.

Keep some photographs of the person who has died.
